Listen and Talk

A1

G: Hey, Minjun, those books look so heavy. Can I give you a hand?

B: Thank you, Lucy. You're so kind!

G: No problem. Why are you carrying so many books?

B: I'm going to sell them in a flea market and donate the money.

G: Wow, I want to join you.

B: Great. It starts this Saturday afternoon.

G: Okay, I'll think about what to sell.

A2

B: Hey, Seoha. What are you doing?

G: I'm looking for one of my drumsticks.

B: Can I give you a hand?

G: Thanks! I need it for our band's performance at the town festival later.

B: Where did you see it last time?

G: Maybe on the stage.

B: Okay, let's find it together.

A3

M: This was hard work! We set up 100 chairs.

W: We finished quickly thanks to you.

M: No problem. I'm happy to help.

W: I really appreciate your help.

M: You know two heads are better than one.

W: I agree. Now let's take a break.

M: How about drinking a cup of hot tea?

W: Sounds good!

B

Mr. Kim: Hello, I'm here to sing at the concert today.

Staff: Oh, you must be Mr. Kim. Nice to meet you.

Mr. Kim: Nice to meet you, too.

Staff: The concert starts in an hour. You can get ready in the waiting room before your turn.

Mr. Kim: Where is the waiting room?

Staff: Just go through that door and go straight.

Mr. Kim: Alright. Oops, the ground is very slippery.

Staff: Can I give you a hand? I can push your wheelchair to the waiting room.

Mr. Kim: I really appreciate your help.

Staff: You're welcome.

G: Hello, everyone. This is your school president, Mia.

Last week, Green Lake Middle School held a bake sale to help people in need. It was a great success! Some students baked and sold delicious cookies, and other students bought them. All the money from the sale went to a local community center. It'll be used for people in need. I really appreciate your help with the bake sale.

Review

G: Hey, Jun. Those boxes look so heavy. Can I give you a hand?

B: Yes, please, Sara. I really appreciate your help.

G: No problem. By the way, what's in the boxes?

B: Oh, these are my toys. I'm going to donate them to a child care center.

G: Sounds good! I have some toys that I don't use anymore. Can I donate them, too?

B: Sure, that will be great!

Sparrow Socks

Years ago, there lived a boy in a small village in Scotland. His name was Angus. A sparrow, Bruce, was his close friend. When they played together, Bruce flew into Angus's pocket.

Angus's father owned a small store that made socks, and Angus sometimes helped him. The store used to have many customers, but recently it lost a lot of them. Villagers started buying socks from a big department store.

One cold winter morning, Bruce and the other sparrows were in a tree. The tree was covered with snow. Angus saw Bruce raising his feet one by one. "Your feet are cold! Maybe I can help you," said Angus.

After the store closed for the night, Angus sat in front of the sock machine. Soon, a tiny pair of socks popped out. Warm and soft winter socks with red stripes! Angus made more and more socks because he knew other sparrows were shaking in the cold weather, too. But he didn't realize that he used up all the wool in the machine.

The next day, the sparrows were wearing something warm. They were wearing cute socks with red stripes! As soon as people saw the socks, they hurried to the department store. They asked, "We want the socks that the sparrows are wearing. Where can we buy them?" But they couldn't find the same socks anywhere.

At the same time in the sock store, Angus's father called Angus. "Son, something strange happened. Someone took all of our wool." Angus honestly said, "Sorry, I made socks for sparrows. They were shaking in the cold weather." Bruce was listening silently in Angus's pocket.

After a while, Bruce brought the other sparrows together and said, "We need to return the socks." "Do we have to? We like these socks," said the other sparrows. Bruce added, "Angus is in trouble because of our socks. We should help him." The sparrows agreed, "Alright then." The sparrows flew into the sock store and piled their socks on the table.

Knock, knock, knock. Just then, people rushed into the store. Someone said, "Finally! These are the socks that I want!" The store was crowded with customers.

"Angus, your kind heart has come back to us as a great gift!" said his father.

Now the villagers are all wearing warm socks with red stripes. Oh, dogs and cats are, too!
